WE'RE FANS OF Sonos' smart, wireless home audio equipment. They integrate with a host of streaming music services, like Pandora, Spotify and Beats Music, and now Sonos can check off one more: Google Play Music.

Google Play Music launched almost a year ago at Google I/O, and became the fastest growing music service of 2013.

according to IFPI (the International Federation of the Phonographic Industry). Not only does it let you store up to 20,000 songs online for free, but you can also buy songs directly through the platform for a monthly fee.

Now, Google Play Music will be available as an option to Sonos owners via the Sonos controller app (iOS, Android, and web). And, for the first time, the Google Play Music Android app is getting updated with a button that lets users easily play music from any Sonos speaker in the house. This is the first time this sort of deep integration has happened between a third party music service and Sonos.

With Sonos, tunes on Google Play Music stream directly to the hardware, rather than being routed first through your handset. Your phone acts only as a remote control for what's playing.

"It's really changed how I use Sonos," Play Music's product lead Paul Joyce said of the update. "And it's definitely increased my listening with my own product too, which is embarrassing and awesome at the same time."

While this announcement may not sound like much – particularly if you aren't currently a Sonos owner or Google Play Music aficionado – it's a strong indicator of how vital it is these days for hardware be imbued with relevant, easy-to-use software. It's not enough that Sonos can connect to the Internet over your home Wi-Fi network. It needs to work seamlessly with your favorite music streaming apps for it to be of the most value to you.

And you can expect Google to continue to collaborate with other audio makers when appropriate. "We want to make it easy for users to enjoy their music and our services wherever they are," Joyce said.
